

JUDITH HUBBARD

Judith Hubbard graduated from Caltech in 2005 with a B.S. in geology, and is now a graduate student in the Earth and Planetary Sciences department at Harvard University. She is interested in how mountains are built and the earthquake hazards associated with that process. She is currently studying the M7.9 Wenchuan earthquake that occurred last year in China and the geological setting that produced it.