

“Tropical Cyclones in a warmer world”

Adam SWITZER

Nanyang Technological University

The world continues to warm and we face an uncertain future in many aspects of climate change. In this talk I will discuss whether the recent spate of unusual weather are attributable to the consequences of the observed increase in global temperature? Is such an increase due to human activities? Or are these simply part of the natural variability of the earth system? These are questions and more we will address in this lecture.