

Rod BOSWELL

The Australian National University

Rod studied at Adelaide and Flinder's Universities during the 1960s in South Australia and was awarded his Bachelors and PhD degrees in plasma physics. At the same time he was lead guitar in a popular rock band, built a car from scratch and ran a printing business (in series, not parallel). He spent the 1970s in Europe - at the University of Sussex, ESA and Max Planck institute in Garching. In the 1980s he became a Professor of Physics at the ANU. Presently he holds a couple of dozen patents, has a Hirsch index of around 45, plays bass in a jazz band and is part owner of 4 high tech companies. His calculator for Android has recently been released by Google.
